

Hi, Dear Friend,

My name is Fuad. I am a student and now I live in Baku. I am an enthusiastic and positive young man. For me, “there are no winners or losers in a war, but all are losers less or more.” That is why I think that peace is the only way for people to live prosperously and together. Relations between our countries have negative impacts on many aspects, including aspects of interethnic dialogue, economy, and policy. The military budget could be spent on education. If the borders were opened and Azerbaijanis abandoned their cradle, they would be able to visit their homes freely. The field of interstate trade would be developed as well.

Since childhood, we have listened to anti-Armenian ideas at schools and in families. This continues. The results of this process are diverse stereotypes and artificial hatred. So, first of all, we should change our views and imaginations, and find the causes of the hate and disagreements.

Frequently, I think positively on overcoming all these because there are such programs as “Letters for Peace.”

I send everyone a message of love and peace, not hate. I do not want to avoid talking to someone because of his Armenian nationality anymore. I don't want his or her nationality to shade my thoughts. Virtually, there never was such a reaction from my side. Nationality, religion, and differences never were problems for me. I have friends in many states.

We should love people for their thoughts. Other factors are not barriers. I hope you also think so. Can nationality be a barrier for you to be a pen friend with him? Would you like to participate in Peacebuilding (as now) in the future?

Full with peace.

With best wishes,

Fuad
