

Dear neighbor Sofia,

First, thank you for your letter. My name is Laman. I'm writing to you from Baku. I study journalism. I read your letter and the letters of other supporters of peace and justice with great pleasure. You have peculiar characteristics that almost coincide with mine, and I agree with your thoughts in the letter. I was glad to read your letter that was written with great enthusiasm and excitement to someone you don't know, and may never even meet.

As you mention in your letter, we should pursue only one goal, and that is the way towards peace, joy and cultural development. We should unite around the same idea of achieving peace. The wish of every peaceful nation – and human beings and even kids – is peace, tranquility, justice, and safety.

Eternal peace is one of the most important issues constantly troubling a righteous nation.

Peace means life, and a healthy generation.

Together with equality, freedom and justice, peace is one of the ideas most pursued by societies and humanity. All of this taken together means constant development of countries and cooperation between them.

I don't want war, and I know many young Azeris and Armenians don't want it, either. We want to find a mutually acceptable solution and live together again. As a citizen of Azerbaijan, I'd like to visit Armenia, and travel in the country as you do in Georgia.

I'd like the Caucasus to be a place where citizens of two countries live in equal conditions.

Sincerely,

Laman
